Current Research Activities

- 1. Housing Policy in Consolidated (irregular) Settlements of Metropolitan Areas in Latin America
This research about self-help housing in Latin America concentrates upon the processes and public policies that take account of self-help housing rehabilitation for those settlements which formed thirty or more years ago. Current research almost exclusively targets newer settlement development and rental housing dynamics, and fails to appreciate the acute policy needs for recasting and renovation of the now densely settled and consolidated (but often highly dilapidated) dwellings built by families in earlier decades of rapid migration and urbanization. It involves a network of researchers working in 10 cities in 7 countries under the umbrella of the University of Texas at Austin, led by Ward. See www.lahn.utexas.org for full website detail.
- 2. Informality: Colonias, and Informal Homestead Subdivisions in the USA.
This corpus of research examines the extension of self-help housing analysis to wider metropolitan America – what I refer to as “informal homestead subdivisions” (aka colonias). This is leading to significant theoretical and methodological contributions about the study of land and housing markets in the USA (see publications list). Two major grants 2010-12 & reports, journal articles and forthcoming book.
- 3. Urban Development, Urban Structures and Planning in Latin American Cities, with special reference to Mexico. In recent years I have become especially interested in issues of urban governance and public administration (see publications list), and current work comprises comparative research about metropolitan management and administration in Latin American comparative perspective and an ongoing research project with Robert Wilson “Metropolitan Governance in Federalist Americas” (November 2012).

Advisory/Consultancy Experience:

Advisor to Mexican Government:

1) Ministry of Human Settlements and Public Works (SAHOP). 1978-79. (Through the UK Overseas Development Ministry.) This was an 18 month appointment. I was invited to advise the newly created Ministry on the formulation of their self-help housing policy. 2) Renovación Habitacional Popular. Appointed by the Mexican Government to an International Advisory Panel to evaluate the earthquake reconstruction program in Mexico, 1986-7. This was an experts' panel which was called to Mexico on two separate occasions to undertake detailed evaluation of the housing reconstruction program.

Adviser and member of International Experts' Panel, World Health Organization 1986-87; 1987-88. The first piece of work involved several meetings held in Egypt and Cambridge in which I was invited to draw up a methodology for the evaluation of environmental health hazards in low income settlement of Third World Cities. This document was subsequently published (with Hassouna, W.) by the WHO as Number 100 of their monograph series entitled: The Community-based survey methodology for the analysis of environmental health in low income settlements.

Consultant to the United Nations Commission for Human Settlements (HABITAT, Nairobi), 1985-86. This comprised my being invited to direct a research project financed by HABITAT to investigate the impact of local leadership upon community development projects in Third World countries. This led to the creation of a "leadership network" being established at UNCHS Nairobi and a monograph written with my research assistant, Local leadership and self-help housing, published by Pergamon Press in 1987.

Consultant to the National Endowment for Democracy, Washington, 1993-94. This comprised an evaluation of democratization processes in Mexico, and a specific analysis of NED's programs to various NGOs in that country.
